NO CIRCULAR WILL BE ISSUED TO THE SCHUYLKILL MINERS.

No Change in the Situation To-Day-It is Denied that Private Operators are Working Their Mines-A Long Conference This Morning Between the President and General Manager of the Beading Road.

ISPECIAL TO THE WORLD, PHILADELPHIA, Jan. 5 .- President Corbin, of the Reading Railroad Company, was closeted for a long while with General Manager McLeod this morning, and the supposition was that the circular which it was currently rumored would be sent to the miners to-day, offering a proposition to compromise, was in course of preparation.

Later, however, Mr. McLeod stated that after due deliberation it had been decided not to issue the circular that was contemplated and that no action would be taken in the matter to-day.

He declined to state what was the tenor of the proposed utterance, but it was learned from another source that it was an appeal to the miners to return to work pending further the miners to return to work pending further consideration of the situation and a threat that if they refused to do so, their places would be filled.

Mr. McLeod declared that no compromise with the miners would be proposed. The company had an agreement with them, and would expect them to abide by it.

The advices from the Schuylkill coal region, however, give no indications that the men hold the agreement as of any importance whatever.

region, however, give no indications that the men hold the agreement as of any importance whatever.

There are still only a few Reading colliers at work, and a prominent coal man said this morning that it was not true that a number of individual collieries were st work in that section. The individual operators are sticking by the company almost to a man and have refuse to continue the 8 per cent. advance of September.

There are some collieries in the Lehigh region owned by individuals which are at work, but these are the exceptions.

Pottsville, Jan. 5.—The situation in the coal regions is worse to-day than yesterday. Several of the company's collieries that were working yesterday have stopped work to-day. The miners' committee at this place claim that all of the company's have stopped work, but officers of the company assert that two are still at work. They admit that the Richardson Colliery, in the Mine Hill District, and the North Franklin Nos. 1 and 2, near Shamokin, stopped work this morning.

The Henry Clay in the Shamokin district, which was working yesterday, also stopped work this morning, but it is claimed by the company that the stoppage was not on account of the strike, but because the shaft which works the coal-breaker broke last night.

which works the coal-breaker broke last night.

The collieries which the company's officials say are working are the Suffolk, in the Mahanov district, and the Brookside, in the the Tremont district. The capacity of the former is seventy-five cars, or about 450 tons per day, and of the latter, 125 cars, or 750 tons. It is admitted, however, that they are not working up to their full capacity.

The capacity of the twenty-one individual collieries which are at work in the Schuylkill region is about 1,000 cars, or 6,000 tons per day. This, it is said by competent judges here, will be sufficient to supply the private demand between here and Philadelphia, but not that of the furnaces.

As far as New York is concerned no fears of a coal famine, it is said, need be entertained if the strike lasts all winter, as the product of the Lackawanna region will be sufficient to meet it.

At the headquarters of the miners' committee it was said that the committee had prepared a letter of thanks to The Wonld for its friendly attitude and impartial reports of the strike. The letter was mailed this morning by the committee, but no copy of it was kent.

It was also said that Chairman Davis had telegraphed to Bradstreet's Agency in New York that the whole mining region is up in arms against the Reading Company. No disturbances are reported.

President Austin Corbin, of the Reading Company, is still in Philadelphia, where he is engaged, it is said, in preparing an address to the striking miners, which it is expected will be issued to-day.

Mr. Corbin, according to his representative here, will make no concessions whatever to the strikers, but will insist that the terms of the agreement of last September be carried out as strictly by the workmen as it has been Timothy Putnam said to-day that there was no truth in the report that the coal-handlers and the longshoremen here would go on strike to sustain the Beading men.

"If there is no coal to handle," said he, "there will be no necessity for a strike. The men will not have any work to do."

No Demands From the Horse Car Men You The conductors and drivers on the Broadway The conductors and drivers on the Broadway Radroad line have not made any demand on the Commany for an increase of 25 cents a day, and it is not likely that they wil.

On the Seventh avenue line the conductors and drivers are now running six trips at $2, instead of seven trips at $2, 05, a revinction of 25 cents a day, which took effect Dec. 26 last.

bell against Charles Arbuckle, the wholesale coffee merchant and millionaire, for breach of promise of marriage was continued before Justice Beach in Part IV. of the Supreme Court to-day.

MISS CAMPBELL ON THE STAND.

When Miss Campbell appeared in court o-day her stylish attire was almost hidden by a fine plush coat. On her head was a little bonnet of bright blue velvet. She was accompanied by two female friends.

She resumed the witness-stand this morning and identified several letters which ex-Judge Fullerton read. They were from Mr.

Judge Fullerton read. They were from Mr. Arbuckle and were couched in the softest, most endearing terms. During their reading the plaintiff's face wore an extremely businesslike expression.

The letters from Mr. Arbuckle to "Bunnis" were full of terms of endearment, but in each was some unfavorable comment on her taste for "stagey" people, for riding in the front seats of cars, and for acting more like a man than a woman. In one letter he complains that her notes are too short and says: says: Oh, Bunnie! If I could only rest my head in your lap and have a good cry!

The defendant arrived in court late, and Miss Campbell's female support glared upon him.

He received their looks with becoming meekness and down-heartedness. He was confused, and blushed violently when his sweetly sentimental effusions were read, and was evidently much relieved when the reading ceased and ex-Judge Fullerton proceeded to examine the fair recipient of the letters.

"In May or June, 1882." Miss Campbell said, "I visited Mr. Arbuckle's brother, John, at his request. Charles said then that he had told his mother and sister of our engagement, and his sister, who had no children, objected.
"Then I said to give her something—we had too much for ourselves. Shortly after

On an objection by Mr. Parsons to a question as to preparations by her for the wedding, a letter dated Nov. 1, 1883, was read. In it she complained to her affianced that he had at first said that the marriage should be in May, 1883; then in the fall, and that now he put it off till January of the new year. Then Miss Campbell continued:

Mr. Arbuckie said we were to be married as soon as his brother returned home from Europe. I informed my father of our approaching marriage and my sister superintended the preparations for the wedding. These preparations were in the fall of 1886.

wedding. These preparations were in the fall of 1882.

Mr. Arbuckle's countenance wore a troubled expression and he munched a clove nervously.

Mr. Parsons cross-examined. Miss Campbell explained that "4-1-11 P-87" in pencil in a letter from Mr. Arbuckle to her meant that it was postmarked April 1 at 11 P. M. and was No. 87 of his letters to her.

A reporter's note-book of about two hundred pages was placed in the hands of the witness. It was written full and contained copies of the letters from Mr. Arbuckle to her. It was prepared in November or December, 1884, after her suit for breach of promise was begun.

Mr. Parsons was anxious to know why, when Miss Campbell copied all the rest of Mr. Arbuckle's letters, she did not copy one written on March 12, 1884, at Alleghany City, Pa. She replied that it must have been mislaid.

Q. You didn't believe him? A. I believed he thought he had broachial and throat troubles.

Q. When did you think to commence this suit?

A. When Mr. Arvuckle sent me 2500. I thought longent not to accept that money till I consulted sembody. That was in December, 1832. I consulted Wells A. Histohins, at Portsmouth, near Ironton, in March, 1836.

Q. Did you inform Mr. Arbuckle then that you were about to begin sait? A. No.

Q. When did you see lawyers in New York? A.

In Abril, 1884. It was in November or December that I asked Mr. Arbuckle to fix the date for our marriage, and the offer of $500 followed that.

Q. Shortly after the receipt of Mr. Arbuckle's letter of April 1, 1884, in which he said he had walked three blocks the day before and had been compelled to keep his couch ever since, you visited New York lawyers to begin this suit?

Mr. Parsons asked the question in a tone which seemed to imply a suspicion that in fear that Mr. Arbuckle would die. Miss Campbell had sued for the cash. Miss Campbell answered affirmatively, quite innocent of the idea the question carried.

Q. Then, so far as you knew, when you sued him Mr. Arbuckle was at Alleghany city, sick in bed? A. Yes, sir. He returned to this city, so I was told, hefore the papers were served on aim, in June.

Q. Now, Miss Campbell, if you possess any letter prior to June in which he reluses to marry you I wish you would produce it.

Miss Campbell confessed that she had no such letter, but ex-Judge Fulterton insisted that Mr. Arbuckle's silence implied a refusal.

Mr. Parsons was thus spoiled of his attempt to show that the red-faced defendant had never refused to marry the fat, fair and forty to show that the red-faced defendant had never refused to marry the lat. fair and forty plaintiff, and the injured dy looked demurely triumphant although the tip of her rather prominent nose had grown very red and there was was "hectic flush" on her ample cheeks, caused by the rigor of the cross-examination.

There was a council of war by defendant's counsel at this point and Mr. Arbuckle's little eyes blinked uneasily. Then Mr. Parsons resumed with the question:

Q. Did not Mr. Arbuckle's letter—the one lost—

Q. Did not Mr. Arouckle's letter—the one lost— somplain of the manner in which you left his let-lers exposed in your trunk in New York?

Miss Campbell could not remember the letters were locked in her trunk securely.

Miss Campbell could not remember the letters were locked in her trunk securely.

Q. Weil, but did he not complein? A. He did, but it was not true. That was after I came home from Washington, after Easter, 1883.

Q. Did he not say something about that trunk being tied up with a cord? A. I don't remember.

Miss Campbell acknowledged that after she had consulted Mr. Hutchins she received two letters from Mr. Arbuckle in which he said he was still sick in bed, and that she made no effort to see him after receiving these letters.

The letter of Nov. I. 1883, written by Miss Campbell after she had consulted Mr. Hutchins, was produced, and Mr. Parsons folled under his tongue this opening:

DEAR BABY BUNTING: You now unfold the longest letter you have ever received. You know my history and how I wanted to be married at once. How you said it should be when your brother came home; then is May; then when the building was unished; then in January you said it could not be then and it has not been yet.

Mr. Parsons asked if she had ever received

Mr. Parsons asked if she had ever received these statements from Mr. Arbuckle. The question was put with a view of showing that they had been put into her letter by Lawyer Hutchins. The letter wound up "with kisses, love, as ever your affectionate Bunnie."

Miss Campbell replied that the lawyer had nothing to do with the letter. At this time Mr. Hutchins had only to do with settling up her father's estate. She consulted him later because she wanted guidance. She wanted to know what Mr. Arbuckle was about wanted to know what Mr. Arbuckle was about.

A letter to Mr. Hutchins in which she expressed fear that Mr. Arbuckle would die, was read, and a laugh was raised by Miss Campbell's statement that she was anxious because Mr. Arbuckle had said he was so sick.

Mr. Parsons brought out the fact that Mr. Arbuckle had written a letter and telegraphed twice from his sick bed on the same day, March 12, 1884, which has was contemplating a suit against him for breach of promise.

An attempt to show that the check from Mr. Arbuckle for $500 was sent to Miss Campbell immediately on receipt of intelligence that her father had made an assignment, brought out the fact that the check came in the third letter after the assignment. Miss Campbell finally used the check before she left for New York.

Mr. Parsons—Then you used that money to come

Mr. Parsons—Then you used that money to come to New York to be an this suit against the giver?

A. I did not. I came to New York supposing Mr. Arbuckle was here to try and settle when we were going to be married. That was March 10. After his letter of April 1, I stopped thinking of him.

Q. Is it not a fact that w thout waiting for Mr. Arbuckle's return to New York, you visited your lawyers and commenced this suit?

Miss. Campbell answard columns.

Miss Campbell answered, solemnly and argumentatively: "You must remember I had waited two years on his repeated promise to come to Ohio and marry me."

"You argue your case very nicely, Miss Campbell," said Mr. Parsons, gallantly and smilingly. "I think it was entirely unnecessarily." Campbell," Baid sink it was entire smilingly. "I think it was entire essary for you to engage lawyers." "I think it was entirely unnec-

Mr. Parsons—Did you not think Mr. Arbuckle was sincere when you received his note upbraiding you for not sooner using his check? A. I didn't Anow.

Q. So you did use it to come to New York and sue him for breach of promise?

A. I don't think you ask questions right. (Laughter.)

Mr. Parsons—Perhaps not as you would like to have them, but please answer them. Did you?

A. I accepted the money with a view to buying my wedding clothes and preparing for our marriage.

At this point a recess was taken.

She used oil in starting a fire in her stove, her skirt began to blaze and in a few moments she was enveloped in flames.

Losing her presence of mind, she ran into the yard. The wind fanned the flames, and by the time her neighbors rushed to her assistance her legs, arms, body and face had been terribly scorched and burned.

The ambulance surgeon said that there was scarcely any hope of saving her life. She has a son who is a truck-driver.

has fallen into the clutches of the Government detectives and has been held by United States Commissioner Adams for trial at the next term of court for running an illicit distillery.

Lutz was lately visited by Government Detective Bennett, who, under the pretext of purchasing the receipt for the celebrated temperance drink, secured valuable criminating evidence against him.

After procuring positive proof Bennett took his man before Commissioner Adams. Lutz testified that he had manufactured a concoction called Allomania Root Bitters in Seneca Falls for sixteen years, and that its components were whiskey, peppermint, oil of anise and syrup, whiskey being the principal ingredient. He advertised it as a great temperance drink, and said that temperance men who once tried it always kept it on hand.

The will provided that the young girl's mother shall receive the income for life, and then the whole estate shall go to Hazard.

Counsel for the relatives expect to prove that the young lady was pregnant at the time of her death, and that fact explains the manner ir which her property was left.

How the Houses of Branch and Williams at Williamstown are Struggling for Supremacy-Mrs. Williams Taken from Hor Father's Home by Her Husband and Carried Back by a Mob-Hints of a Property Quarrel and an Attempted Murder Among Interested Parties.

DETROIT, Jan. 5.—Nathan Branch is a promnent member of the Central Michigan Agricultural Society. Three years ago his daughter Della married John Williams, the son of a retired wealthy farmer of Williamstown. A year later a girl baby was born to them. Not long after the young mother began to be troubled with impairment of vision and was taken to her mother's home. There she was treated for a time by Dr. Defendorf, the family physician of the Williamses, but dissatisfaction being expressed by the Branches, Dr. Shank, of Lansing, was called. He performed an operation on Della Williams which, it is alleged, was a failure.

Out of this circumstance—the Williamses calling one physician and the Branches ancalting one physician and the Branches another—is said to have started a family feud.
Williams was soon denied the privilege of seeing his wife. So last night he and his eight brothers, with the family doctor, visited the Branches, put Mr. and Mrs. Branch under guard, and removed Mrs. Williams, bed and all, to the house of her husband.
The Branch party at once raised up the neighborhood. The mother told a pitiful story, working on the feelings of the crowd, and, headed by Farmer Branch, the whole party this morning marched into the village and up to the Williams house, Branch having previously secured a writ of replevin for the bed.

previously secured a writ of replevin for the bed.

A crowd ran forward and burst in the door and was confronted in the hall by the husband, Williams. He pleaded with them sot to rob him of his wife, saying that the shock would kill her.

He was overpowered by the mob, his helpless wife seized and placed in a sleigh and driven back to her mother's home.

This did not content the mob, however, Its blood was up. "Now let's get Defendorf and string him up," cried several.

Defendorf's sister-in-law ran over to the doctor's house and told him. Himself and brother of the husband, who was in the house, at once stepped out the back door and disappeared.

When the mob found they had escaped its members were furious. They went up and down the street howling with rage and threatening to lynch every person concerned in the case.

A reign of terror prevails in the village. It's threatening to lynch every person conservation the case.

A reign of terror prevails in the village. It's more than hinted that back of all this surface trouble is a big property quarrel, and that an attempt has been made to murder a person who stands in the way of interested parties. This is well known in the village and accounts for the special fury of the terromorphs.

In the absence of specific informtaion as to the cause of his death, the theory of suicide is common among downtown people who are familiar with the family and who know how much mental trouble he has undergone within for injuries resulting from the sale by the defend-ant to the plaintiff of a lot of damaged pork, which the plaintiff ate believing it to be good and which made him ill. The Court holds that in the case of market and provision men there is an implied warranty that the goods are fit to cat, but that this rule does not apply to the case of a farmer, and as the defendant in this case did not warrant the meat the plaintiff cannot recover. MIDDLETOWN, N. Y., Jan. 5.—It is currently re-ported that A. T. Flogans, proprietor of a barber shop ontJames street, this village, has eloped in company with the wile of a well-known railroad m.p. Flogans left behind him a wife and cuild. He also left many creditors, having just before his departure has merchants ones checks for which there was no money deposited in the bank.
